

The advantage of time work in Germany

Immigration and employment in Germany

- Chances on the modern job market are practically inexhaustible

- Time work can offer the chance to gain experience and know-how

- Temporary employed workers can work in many different areas

Time work is a medal with two sides. On the one hand temporary workers have the same rights and the same duties as a “permanent regular employee”. On the other hand it is a possible way out of unemployment. In addition, time work can offer the chance of an easy access to the life of a professional worker e.g. to young professionals.

Temporary workers will have the chance to gain experiences and achieve specialized knowledge while expanding their professional network. Temporary workers are also known to be very adaptable and efficient.

While being temporary employed the employee has access to knowledge areas which he normally would not be able to experience so easily.

Employees being temporary employed in Germany can work in very different areas in a very short time. Starting from a "normal" worker, temporary workers have the ability to be developed into management positions. The opportunities to be found on the modern job market are very wide and open.

Temporary worker can grow their skill set in different specialities - without certificate of proficiency. In no other economic areas applications are as easy as in time work. Furthermore, the lack of specialised work force provokes a rise of wage and salary.

Major advantages of time work in Germany

- Full legal security
- Trying out different jobs
- Re-entry in the professional life
- Meeting your new (future) boss
